SAZAN ISLAND, ALBANIA

Sazan Island, approximately two and one half miles long and one mile wide, is strategically located at the mouth of Vlone Bay and commands the entrance from the Adriatic Sea. The entire island is known to be under military control, with both army and naval units stationed here as a permanent garrison. Defense positions include an 8-gun and two 4-gun (85-100 mm) dual-purpose batteries and an 8-gun and one 4-gun medium (85-100 mm) anti-aircraft battery. All of these batteries are radar-controlled. A probable early warning TOKEN radar site is also present. Numerous machine gun positions, bunkers, and underground storage areas are scattered throughout the island.

San Nicolo Harbor, on the east side of the island, is a small naval base for three "Kronshtadt" class PC boats and a few PT boats. A 220-foot possible transporter dock, used for underwater repairs to patrol craft, was also present in [REDACTED]

There is no photographic evidence of a reported submarine base or an underground petroleum products storage area on Sazan Island. There has been no major construction or any apparent significant change on the island since [REDACTED]

The major installations on the island are annotated on the accompanying line drawing and described in the key to annotations. The photo mosaic of Sazan Island included in this report is made from [REDACTED] photography.
